TROUBLE AMONG METHODISTS.

The Rev. Olin A. Curtis Speaks of the Example Set by Rev. Mr. Faville.

He Justifies Mr. Faville's Withdrawal from the Methodist Church.

Janesville Methodists were surprised to learn by news that the Rev. Olin A. Curtis, for three years pastor of Court Street church, was to follow the Rev. Henry Faville's example in withdrawing from the Methodist church.

The report is generally understood to be a mistake. Mr. Curtis has accepted a call to the Methodist Episcopal church of Englewood, Ill., and from this it is that the other report has sprung. A Milwaukee dispatch to the Chicago News of to-day reads:

The failure of Bishop Andrews to remove Presiding Elder Haley has resulted in a great deal of discord among the Methodists in this portion of the state.

Rev. Olin A. Curtis, late pastor of the Summerfield church in this city, speaking of Elder Haley, says he considers him a dangerous man to hold that position. Mr. Curtis said that the Rev. Mr. Updike, the present pastor of the Summerfield church, had been much more bitter against Mr. Haley than had Mr. Faville, and had only been allowed to retain the pastorate because Mr. Haley was afraid to remove him.

Mr. Updike said this evening that he did not care to say what he thought of Mr. Haley just at present. He spoke very highly of Mr. Faville, however.

Concerning his withdrawal from the Methodist church, the Rev. Henry Faville said to-day that he did not object to his appointment as made by the conference, but only to the appointing power.

"In my own case," said he, "I cannot think that they were actuated by just motives, for it is customary for presiding elders to confer with me in reference to appointments and my presiding elder said to me word to me. When the appointments were made I found I had received a second-class one. I think that it was spite work on the part of Haley. My reasons for opposing him was that he was injudicious, hasty, and reckless of the character of his brethren. I do not know what I shall do, but presume that I shall enter either the Presbyterian or the Congregational church."

Last night Mr. and Mrs. Faville were pleasantly surprised by a large number of the Methodist congregation at their residence in Racine.

The Rev. E. G. Updike is much distressed over some of the implied and expressed criticism which has been visited upon his friend and colleague, Mr. Faville, for his resignation. To a Milwaukee Sentinel reporter he said:

"Brother Faville is anything but a 'kicker.' He is one of the most patient and sweetly spirit souls I know; and a man of such capacity and force, withal, that he would at any time in his career have commanded his own choice in location and salary—had he not clung to our communion despite his dislike of the itinerant system. This has not been a fight at all, nor yet a personal difference, in which Brother Faville, myself, and perhaps a score of other preachers of this district joined, at the bishop's own invitation, in a friendly remonstrance. As to the details of the matter, I deem it unwise to say anything at present. But I cannot permit the motives of Brother Faville to be aspersed. His resignation will be a great loss to us—yet I can not blame him for the step taken. Nor is it true that he ever took the same before, only to retract it; or that he ever threatened to leave as it has been so often said. Some years since it is true that Congregationalist church of Oaklaid sought to secure him as its pastor. While he was conscientiously considering the proposal, the secret leaked out, and, as in honor bound, he forthwith resigned his office, but his people would not hear of his leaving them. That's all there is about it. Please set Mr. Faville right."
